

Editorial

This is not an ordinary issue of the SJIS. The present editorial board, operating the last two years, introduced a practice of only one ordinary issue a year. The present issue marks the first where the optional second issue in the form of a special issue is invoked. We are pleased that this is a special issue aimed at exploring the intriguing landscape around ethnography, design and science studies, a theme closely aligned with ambitions of the journal.

The current issue is special in a sad way. For the first time in the history of the journal, we print an obituary. Kristen Nygaard passed away in August. Few – if any – have contributed more to the institutionalisation of a socially informed and politically relevant research tradition in our Scandinavian based community. We strive to cultivate your heritage, Kristen.

Eric Monteiro, editor-in-chief.

Ola Henfridsson, Jesper Simonsen, Virpi Kristiina Tuunainen